

Michigan Magazine

Barry, also born in Flint, was raised in rural northern Michigan's Amish country near Fairview, Michigan. Barry quickly found outlets for his fascination with broadcasting by securing part time work at a local radio station while still in high school. From there Barry worked at various Radio stations throughout Michigan at various positions from DJ to Program Director and talk show host. Barry was swept into TV via a local Cable Company and his own local news and talk show.

When the pair met they discovered their mutual love of Michigan's back roads and the people with stories to tell... the rest is as they say "history". Dell and Barry they joined forces, and pooled their resources to begin producing and distributing Michigan Magazine to Public TV stations across the state.

The weekly series also created a demand by viewers to produce a quarterly Magazine that now highlights the travels of pair. The Michigan Magazine "Magazine" celebrated it's 10th anniversary in May of 2002.

Then a museum was built that houses the art work and gift they've received from the guests and places they featured on the program. the museum is a non profit organization that acts as an educational outlet and tourist attraction visited by thousands of loyal viewers each year. Here viewers get the chance to experience what they've seen on the program.
